A picture teeming with romance—touched with pathos—abounding in thrilling scenes and exciting climaxes.

EVERYBODY LIKES A GOOD LOVE STORY—EVERYBODY WANTS TO SEE COMEDY
The most of us enjoy the "thrillers" of the screen—a few like the sentimental—it's all shown in this great supermaster picture—

"I Believe"

In "I Believe" a great theme is handled without "preachiness" or intrusive moralizing. The intelligence of the audience is left to pronounce the verdict. Neither religious nor irreligious, the truth is demonstrated upon the appeal of its merits.

The Story.
Temple Trask, a young college man, is on his way home for a vacation when he meets Helen Scott on the train. He only sees the girl's face over a magazine but falls immediately and hopelessly in love with her, in spite of the jibes of his roommate and friends.
The girl cannot help noticing his attention, but they do not speak. She is absorbed in worrying about her grandmother, a miserly old woman who is now sick and in the clutches of two crooks, Adrian, her so-called secretary, and Rena, the housekeeper, who are "pals." They are planning to rob the old lady, and Helen, suspecting this, arrives just in time.
Rena is in love with Adrian and bitterly jealous because he seems fond of Helen. She therefore urges that they rob the house and leave at once. As they are opening the safe, the old lady, suspicious, leaves her bed and comes down stairs. There is a struggle. The old woman is thrown against the edge of the safe and, weak from illness, the shock of the blow nearly kills her. Adrian and Rena fly in terror with the money.

Helen is awakened by the sound of the fight and comes downstairs to find her grandmother lying by the empty safe in a faint. The police are notified and owing to the fact that until that time Helen had always quarreled with her grandmother, and had only come to her when she seemed desperately ill and likely to die, the girl is under suspicion of having committed the theft. Terrorized, she seems unable to clear herself and matters commence to look extremely black for her.

Temple Trask has never seen Helen since their chance meeting on the train, but has continued a search for her and unsuccessfully questioned all of his friends as to her identity. What is his amazement, then, to see her eyes staring out at him from the paper, the morning after the theft, as the girl accused of the crime.

"THE FLAME" BIG SHOW AT ORPHEUM

Lovers of romance and spectacle will be glad to learn that Richard Walton Tully's striking play, "The Flame," comes to the Orpheum Theatre for one evening, Thursday, November 15. "The Flame" was the big dramatic sensation of last season in New York, and will come here with a superb company and massive scenic investiture. The play has been aptly described as "a thrilling drama of love and motherhood" and it has been staged by the author with the lavishness and ingenuity that marked his previous successes, "The Bird of Paradise" and "Omar, The Tentmaker." The scenes of the play are laid in Latin America, opportunity thus being offered for settings of rare picturesqueness and vivid coloring. The story of "The Flame" concerns the love-life of a young American couple who are seeking their fortune by the cultivation of banana groves. Just as fortune seems to be smiling upon them they are suddenly plunged in the maelstrom of Latin American uprisings and revolutions, and disaster after disaster pours upon them. Always, however, the flame of their love burns brighter, and in the end they receive the greatest treasure that it is within earth's province to bestow. Throughout the performance there is much incidental music of a novel and haunting character. Undoubtedly the most thrilling of the stage pictures is the one showing a hurricane sweeping through the green jungle. Here is presented one of the most realistic storms ever devised upon the stage. The remarkable company gathered by Mr. Tully includes Martha McGraw, June Hawthorne, James Seelye, Godfrey Mathews, Henry Sherwood, Byron Russell, Will T. Chatterton, George Le Soir, William O'Day, Harry Morvil, J. D. Walsh, Jack Kingsberry,

COAL SUPPLY TO BE RESTRICTED

Industries Being Classified and Less Necessary Plants Will Be Given Limited Amount.

SHORTAGE RELIEF

Electrical Display With Current Provided by Coal to Be Reduced.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 10.—Coal supplies to industries classed as nonessential will be sharply reduced by the fuel administration within a few days. Industries are now being classified and those whose products are not necessary in the conduct of the war will be supplied with fuel in limited quantities. If the present coal shortage persists they will be cut off entirely from fuel supply.

To relieve the coal shortage in Ohio and Michigan, the fuel administration will suspend for one day, on November 19, the present priority order under which most of the coal mined in the central field is going to the lakes for transshipment to the north west. The recent one-day suspension left the two states still suffering because of lack of coal.

The fuel administration will issue an order tonight forbidding the use of coal for current in electric display advertising before 7:45 o'clock p. m. In thus reducing the peak load of coal consumption a great amount of coal, it is claimed, will be saved in the larger cities.

The electric light order also will prevent the use of coal for current for display advertising after 11 o'clock p. m.
